

Corrie Kron is a Nashville native looking to make a difference. With a degree in International Migration from Kent University, she hopes to, work in resettlement. “Just the couple days I’ve been here [at NICE], has made resettlement really exciting.”

Corrie has been volunteering for NICE for only a week now, but is already hooked. “As long as I am in Nashville, I’ll be here [at NICE].” Not only is Corrie thoroughly enjoying her time as a volunteer; she is enjoying the perspective she has gained as a result. “There’s a difference between education and experience. You can talk about the challenges that face refugees, but to do something like help establish shelter for someone else is far more valuable than what you would gain through the media or a classroom.”

Corrie also encourages others to volunteer. “It feels so good to be able to say to someone, ‘here, it’s okay, you’re safe.’”
